My darling - your note came yesterday.
I am sorry for your loss.

Yes I shall take the little trunk, & all our estate soon things can go in it. I want to know what banker you are going to. It is best we should have the same one. & do you not think it best that it should be an English house this time. Father suggests Baring Bros. I think the French Etalieu etc phrase book was in your trunk & the French dictionary; put them on top. We shall want a German guide book. & I must try to borrow one here - perhaps you had better see if the Shannons can lend one in case I should not succeed.
You will bring the deck chairs, what now?
Father thinks my posse - port will not need renewing.

I went to your brother's to learn about our steamer. It is not in port yet.

I understand that our rooms are mid ship, about, & not on deck - he could not tell whether they were opposite each other or not: but if not it was because there were none so situated engaged. I hope the lower cabin is like the Mississippi's not Calabria's.

It is frosty this morning.
Solid ice.

I can't tell you how busy we are. We hope to see Louise & Henry today.

You do not say whether Sarah comes or not yet. With love to all three more than ever -
